Educational Leadership

IN MARCH

We Look at Group Living: In order to achieve effective grouping in today's schools, many methods and procedures must be thought through and tried out.

This month's magazine gives us a survey of the whys, the hows, and the ways of cultivating the type of group living which is acceptable to boys and girls—and their parents—as well as to teachers and administrators.

One of the features in this issue is a recorded discussion of some factors of grouping which validate the importance of flexibility and the promoting of social and academic skills. Other articles accent the need for improvement in this field, and outline some means in which this can be accomplished. A comprehensive bibliography of materials compiled to aid school people in re-evaluating and reorganizing practices in meeting today's classroom needs is included.

The departments bring information concerning new educational publications, current practices in educational methods, and legislation affecting the schools and their children.
