Education for Life Needs is the theme of the March magazine. There is no one definition of "life needs" and the many facets of this theme are approached by the March authors in many ways.

Some of the topics discussed are: education for family life, consumer education, life adjustment programs, development of moral and ethical values, community participation, junior high school students plan their life adjustment program, implications of social class for the curriculum, mental health and education, general education through participation in occupations, the UNESCO Tensions Project, and a cooperative study in a rural community.
