The best sort-of literature that I just recently read was “The Resourceful Classroom,” the latest edition of Ed Leadership.

You look at some ed articles, ed journals, you might have one or two articles that really interest you and you read it. Every single article—from cover to cover—I read just because it was so practical. It was what was going on right now. It talked about how schools are doing more with less. They gave examples of schools that were doing it.

Every single article in that literature, which literally took me less than a day to read, was beneficial.
